

Insubordination Given As Factor In Library Case

Mayor Edwin S. Dunaway, speaking for the board of city commissioners, gave "insubordination" as the reason for the dismissal of Miss Ruth Brown, city librarian. The commissioners met in open session in the ball room of Civic Center Monday night before an assemblage of some 50 persons.

Many of the group publicly stated that they attended the meeting only to get both sides of the controversy, not to object or find fault with the commissioners' actions. This opinion was expressed by J. W. McCaslin, who said he felt there was entirely too much rumor and too little fact. He said there was antagonism on both sides, and that he felt the citizens had a right to know the reasons in the controversy, in order to judge. He added that he had attended the meeting, hoping to be enlightened as to the issues involved.

Willard A. Talmadge expressed the feelings of those persons who had come to find out the reason for Miss Brown's dismissal, and who engaged in debate with the commissioners. He said he would like to hear an expressed opinion by the commissioners on Miss Brown's dismissal. He said that he had asked each commissioner over the phone and had received different replies from each. He added that the answer he had received from the mayor was not logical or did not seem logical to him.

PAGE 10— The Bartlesville Examiner-Enterprise, Tuesday, August 8, 1950

Insubordination Is Given As Reason For Dismissal Of Bartlesville's Librarian

Mayor Edwin S. Dunaway, speaking for the board of city commissioners, gave "insubordination" as the reason for the dismissal of Miss Ruth Brown, city librarian. The commissioners met in open session in the ball room of Civic Center Monday night before an assemblage of some 50 persons.

Many of the group publicly stated that they attended the meeting only to get both sides of the controversy, not to object or find fault with the commissioners' actions. This opinion was expressed by J. W. McCaslin, who said he felt there was entirely too much rumor and too little fact. He said there was antagonism on both sides, and that he felt the citizens had a right to know the reasons in the controversy, in order to judge. He added that he had attended the meeting, hoping to be enlightened as to the issues involved.

Willard A. Talmadge expressed the feelings of those persons who had come to find out the reason for Miss Brown's dismissal, and who engaged in debate with the commissioners. He said he would like to hear an expressed opinion by the commissioners on Miss Brown's dismissal. He said that he had asked each commissioner over the phone and had received different replies from each. He added that the answer he had received from the mayor was not logical or did not seem logical to him.