PROGRAM NOTES:

Take Me Out to the Ball Game

“Take Me Out to the Ball Game” is an early-20th century Tin Pan Alley song which became the unofficial anthem of baseball. The song is traditionally sung during the seventh inning stretch of a baseball game, in spite of the technicality that it is written from the perspective of someone not currently watching a game. Fans are invited to stand, stretch legs, and sing along during a pause between the top and bottom halves of the seventh.

The words were written in 1908 by Jack Norworth, otherwise best-known for writing “Shine On Harvest Moon”. While riding a subway train, he was inspired by a sign that said “Game Today-Polo Grounds”. After he wrote the lyrics, it was set to music by Albert Von Tilzer although neither of them had ever seen a baseball game before. The song was first sung by Norworth’s wife Nora Bayes, then further popularized by various vaudeville acts.

The verses to the song are almost never heard, but the chorus is commonly held to be the third most-often-played song in the United States, after The Star-Spanngled Banner and Happy Birthday.

I Got Rhythm.....George Gershwin

Ethel Merman made her memorable debut in Girl Crazy by singing I Got Rhythm. One of a genre of Lighthearted songs asserting the superiority of music, nature, and love over material wealth and power. I Got Rhythm has been a popular favorite with singers and audiences for the past 75 years. The musical in which this song first appeared was a satire on the rough-an-ready western frontier of an earlier America.
