Falke is determined to have revenge on his friend Eisenstein. It seems that during the recent carnival celebration, Eisenstein left Falke, who was masquerading as a bat, asleep in the park where he found himself the following morning surrounded by a crowd of people mocking him. From that day on, he endured the nickname: 'The Bat.' Prince Orlofsky's next extravagant party would be the setting for his elaborately staged plot against his friend. Falke had invited each member of the Eisenstein household to the party, without the other's being aware. As this act begins, the party is in full-swing, and Falke's plan begins to unfold. Toward the end of the evening, all are once again united in love and brotherhood, toasting champagne and life. Entertainment for the Prince continues on into the night.
